Course Title: Law Enforcement/Community Relations
Course Number: CRJ341

Course Description:

Law enforcement and police operations affect the democratic process more crucially than any other aspect of public policy. This course looks at the discretionary conduct of the police, the development of police power, and the degree to which officers perform their tasks in accordance with community values and needs.

Learning Outcomes of the Criminal Justice Program:

1. Be able to link theory and practice.
2. Be able to critically evaluate the criminal justice system, identifying its strengths, identifying its weaknesses, and understanding its operational processes.
3. Recognize the need for the development of a fair, just, and ethical criminal justice system.
4. Be able to understand and develop explanations for a variety of human behaviors and seek solutions to social problems impacting the criminal justice system.
5. Develop an interdisciplinary approach to the study and practice of criminal justice and appreciate the role of social sciences in the study of criminal justice.

Relationship of the Course to the Program’s Learning Outcomes:

This course is related to three of the program’s learning outcomes. First, the student will be able to link theory and practice; be able to apply theory to classroom activities and to work settings in the community. This will be achieved by comparing how the criminal justice system was intended to operate with the reality of how it functions. Second, the student will be able to critically evaluate the criminal justice system, identifying its strengths and weaknesses and understanding its operations process. Finally the student will recognize the need for the development of a fair, just, and ethical criminal justice system.
Course Objectives:

1. To examine the police as a major component of the criminal justice system.
2. To identify and describe the police role.
3. To discuss police community relations.
4. To examine the police organization to gain an understanding of how police departments function.
